GENERAL INSTRUCTIONS

What is a Real Estate Purchase Agreement?

A Real Estate Purchase Agreement is a written document between a buyer who wants to purchase a home or other piece of real property and a seller who owns that property and wants to sell it. It is usually proposed by a buyer, and subject to the seller's acceptance of the terms. This document does not actually transfer title of a home, building, or lot. Instead, it provides a framework of the rights and responsibilities of each party before the legal transfer of title can occur.

A Real Estate Purchase Agreement may also be called:

- Real Property Purchase Agreement
- Real Estate Contract
- Residential Real Estate Purchase Agreement
- Agreement to Purchase Real Estate

When Do I Need One?

After watching House Hunters on HGTV for years, it's finally your turn to go out and find the perfect home. Or you've bought a run-down home, poured your money and sweat into fixing it up, and now you're ready to list it for sale. Either way, once you find that perfect home or ideal buyer, you'll want to make sure that you have an agreement in writing to ensure that it's smooth sailing until the closing, and you'll know what to do if there are any hiccups along the way.

You should use a Real Estate Purchase Agreement if you (a) are a potential buyer or seller of residential property, (b) want to define the legal rights of each party to the sale, and (c) outline each party's respective duties before the transfer of legal title.

This agreement can be used for any residential property purchase or sale, as long as the construction of the home is completed before the closing date of the contract.

Sometimes a buyer will pay for the property all in cash. However, most of the time, the buyer will need additional financing to come up with the full purchase price. Here are the three common financing methods used in real estate purchase agreements:

- Third-party financing: A bank or other lending institution provides a loan or mortgage to a buyer which the buyer must pay back over time, with interest. This is the most common form of property purchase financing. Third-party financing can be affected by things like a buyer's employment situation, present financial portfolio, and credit score.

- Seller financing: The seller acts as the bank or lending institution and agrees to lend the buyer money to purchase the property. The buyer then pays back the loan over time, with interest.

- Assumption of mortgage: The buyer agrees to take over and pay the seller's liability for payments on an already existing mortgage on the property. This method saves the buyer from closing costs or potentially higher interest rates on a new mortgage.

When Do I Need One?

If you don't have a Real Estate Purchase Agreement, you and the other party to the contract will not have a clear understanding of your rights, the possible risks, and any economic implications of those potential risks. Without an agreement, it will be much more difficult to negotiate the scope of each party's liability and enforce your legal rights.
